Theodor Nöldeke, a German orientalist of Danish origin, held the view that the Quran is a holy book that is heavily influenced by the Jewish faith. As an Iranist, a pupil of Heinrich Ewald (1803-1875), Nöldeke benefited from a solid training in oriental philology, linguistics, and history, all of which contributed to him becoming the most renowned orientalist in the Second German Reich. It was fortunate for Iranian studies that he included them in his Arabic studies, as he was the greatest.

Theodor Noldeke was a brilliant Semitist and his grammar of Syriac, English version published in 1904, is the most complete one currently available. However, the science of linguistics has made great strides since Noldeke's era, and it is to be hoped that a new comprehensive grammar of Syriac will be forthcoming.
